

Conclusion

Three of the most important shires in the South East Queensland NRM region in terms of agricultural production in 2000-01 were the Beaudesert Shire, the Boonah Shire and the Gatton Shire. The Gatton Shire especially produced 7% of the South East Queensland NRM region's 2000-01 agricultural value in vegetable production alone. The Redland and Caloundra Shires were important in for meat poultry production, both producing 21% of Queensland's 2000-01 meat poultry.

The largest percentage of land prepared for cropping in the South East Queensland NRM region in 2000-01 was in the Rosalie Shire (39.5%). The shire where the most irrigation took place was Laidley which accounted for 15.8% of the irrigation that occurred in the South East Queensland NRM region in 2000-01. The greatest amount of fertiliser used in 2000-01 in the South East Queensland NRM region was in the Beaudesert Shire (11.7%).

The largest percentage of fencing constructed to exclude grazing in the South East Queensland NRM region in 2000-01 was in the Esk Shire (13%). This reflects the large number of cattle and calves produced in the Esk Shire. The Noosa Shire (29%) was responsible for the largest number of tree seedlings planted in the South East Queensland NRM region in 2000-01. Most of the tree seedlings planted in the Noosa Shire was used in timber and wood pulp production.

This report has provided a basic social and agricultural profile of the South East Queensland NRM region based on 2001 SLA data, and also presented a breakdown of agricultural and natural resource management information for each of the local government areas located in the South East Queensland NRM region. This information may be useful in assisting with planning and implementation of natural resource management activities and programs in the region. More importantly, the information compiled in this report also provides a baseline against which data from future censuses (next due in 2006) can be compared.
